

“For Black people, justice has been delayed for far too long. If organized labor is serious about existing in another 30 years, we will need to reject the idea that addressing race in unions is divisive. Organized labor will have to acknowledge its past faults, articulate a vision of true social and economic equity, and exercise our power as labor to achieve that vision.” - www.labornotes.org

As educators, we have the unique responsibility to foster in all young people the greatest values of this country: fairness, justice, and equity. It is our responsibility to work to abolish racism on an individual, structural, and institutional level beginning in our schools. The time is now. Join Us.

**Please take a moment to complete this brief survey that will allow us to better understand our need to adapt and respond to the existence of systemic privilege.
